Opera Australia launches most exciting and innovative Sydney program to date

Opera Australia today launched one of its most exciting and innovative programs to date when it unveiled its 2019 Sydney Season in the Joan Sutherland Theatre at the Sydney Opera House.

Launching the 2019 Season using the new LED screens that have wowed the sell-out audiences at the new production of Aida, Artistic Director Lyndon Terracini was thrilled to present such a diverse, creative and progressive program.

“As a national opera company we need to remain part of the 21st century and 2019 will be a showcase of how we are approaching this challenge,” said Terracini.

Celebrating its boldness as a contemporary arts organisation still steeped in tradition, Opera Australia unveiled a program indicative of its forward thinking approach to the art form. With the introduction of three exciting new digital productions along with a mix of crowd-favourite revivals and concert presentations, the 2019 Season will showcase the finest talent from Australia and around the world, both on and off the stage.
